R. Linginfelter, a physician's assistant for the team.

The Tacoma, Wash., native said that bringing the animals not only showed the villagers the team could be trusted but also the strong relationships the teams have built in that area.

When they weren't treating animals, many soldiers spent their time improving their French-speaking abilities with local children. As students, service members were corrected by their young teachers quickly when a word was said wrong, said Dickson.

"The kids were having a good time teaching French to everyone," said Dickson. "Once they were comfortable with us, we even played soccer with them."

Even though the number of animals treated at the end of the two days was only 77, for the team it was a small victory in the endeavor to build relationships with local villagers. The soldiers said they are very confident when they return to the area again they will be welcomed as friends.

"Small victories like this one will help in the end," said Dickson. "It's like a puzzle, eventually all the pieces will fall into place."

"Show Time" at the Cantina

For five more weeks Saturday, try your luck at an "Apollo" style talent show. If you've got what it takes, show off your skills or talents to a panel of judges and the audience who decide whether or not you stay or go. The show starts at 8 p.m. this Saturday.

The competition, sponsored by the BOSS Community, is free and anyone can sign up.

Weekly winners receive $100 and the grand prize winner gets $1,000.

Contact Gunnery Sgt. Noble to sign up at 824-3306.

"In the past if we overexposed or underexposed a film the doctor had us re-shoot the film," Smith said. "This eliminates that problem."

Patients will spend less time being X-rayed as well.

"Time from exposure to actual development too has been decreased," Smith said. "What once took two minutes to develop takes approximately 45 seconds to scan and develop."

For both patients and medical caregivers here, the new technology represents an improvement in the EMU's capabilities.

"We have definitely made a great stride by acquiring digital radiography," said Lt. Cmdr. Diane Gilliland, the EMU's emergency physician. "This technology will only help us to better care for the Marines, soldiers, sailors and airmen aboard Camp Lemonier."

Orphanage Volunteer Trips
